ADVANCED TRAINING

The Executive Seminar in National and International Affairs is the most advanced training program available to selected senior grade officials of United States Government agencies with foreign affairs responsibilities. This ten-month program has been conducted annually since 1958 by the Foreign Service Institute of the Department of State.

The Twentieth Executive Seminar is composed of twenty-seven Members, fifteen of whom are Foreign Service Officers and the remainder are from the Departments of Defense, Agriculture and the Treasury, the United States Information Agency, the Agency for International Development, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the four Armed Services. The Members' average age is forty-five and their average length of Government service is more than twenty vears.

UPDATING KNOWLEDGE

One major goal of the seminar is to broaden the Members' understanding of contemporary political, economic, social and cultural trends in the United States and of the ways they interact with U.S. interests abroad. In this context, emphasis is given to the broad domestic framework of political decision-making, congressional-executive relations, the management of foreign affairs and negotiation. Extensive reading, travel, in-house discussions, individual case studies and on the spot exchanges of view with prominent educators, scientists, business, labor and agricultural leaders, figures in the media and the arts, government officials and law enforcement authorities are important components of the Seminar program.

The theory behind the approach is that through this kind of intellectual challenge and exchange, the Members emerge from the Seminar with a broader perspective on domestic and international problems. This provides them with an enhanced ability to advance United States interests abroad and to deal with
